The value of video

We all compete in two markets. Business, and talent. So why limit opportunities to within 20 miles of an office? There is a better way.

Cisco collaboration customers know that providing seamless video experiences means access to people and markets that wouldn't normally be in reach. In fact, time and space don't matter so much when you can feel enthusiasm in HD.

We created this toolkit with quick reference guides, promotional assets and user cases designed to help you successfully use video in your business. Amazing things happen when people have workplaces powered by Webex.

On a mission to connect people? So are we.

Video collaboration... Makes people more productive

Employee productivity is one of the most important measures of profitability for most businesses. It's a hot topic in most boardrooms, as people are the most strategic asset and largest cost for most companies, with property a very close second.

Providing world class collaboration experiences is one of the best things you can do to improve employee productivity. Plus, a well thought out adoption plan means you'll be even more likely to succeed in getting the most return from your investment in Cisco Collaboration.

- 80% of executives and IT leaders agree that video collaboration is the most important productivity tool for their organization. Source: Gartner, 2017

Video collaboration... Makes people more engaged

Employee engagement used to be optional, but now it's pretty much the whole game. From recruitment and onboarding to pay and rewards, every day you have the opportunity to create employee experiences for your best talent in the moments that matter to them.

There's growing research that flexible working is a major factor in driving high performance, development and well-being of employees. Cisco's simple modern video meeting solutions offer consumer grade experiences that enable employees to flexibly work any time, any place and on any device to meet work-life balance needs.

- 33% of employees who work flexibly are significantly more likely to report having had less or more generations over the past few years. Source: PwC, 2017
- 60% of employees feel more engaged and productive when they have flexibility in where, when and how they work. Source: PwC, 2017

- 82% of workers prefer more for video calls. Source: Cisco, 2017

Video collaboration... Attracts the best talent

Its official, great talent wants choices. Stanford University researchers found being employees work remotely or from home made them happier, less likely to quit, and more productive. In fact, flexible scheduling and work-from-home opportunities play a major role in decisions to take or leave a job.

For all of us, providing choice of where and how to work means providing simple, but powerful technologies that give managers the visibility and confidence about predicting, avoiding, collaborative and mistakes even when they aren't physically with their employees.

- 37% of employees would change their job to have the ability to work where they want (at least part of the time). Source: Gallup, 2017
- 33% less time taken to hire a new employee by fully distributed companies. Source: PwC, 2017
- 66% of managers see a correlation between technology and their organization's performance. Source: Gartner, 2017
